

At 23 Paul became the UK's youngest lecturer in English, having been appointed before he took his own finals. Three years later he became the youngest examiner too. Over the next decade he was offered university posts in the UK and overseas before concluding his academic career with a stint in Switzerland. After that he moved into Zurich-based general commerce then Lugano-based market intelligence, at which time he studied for an MBA before becoming a writer.

Since then Paul has written for international blue-chip clients in almost every sector imaginable. These have included:

Trader training materials for Saxo Bank of Denmark

Exhibition stand materials for Nissan and Volvo

Print ads for Pfizer and Imperial Wharf

Campaign messaging for Burger King and Woolworths

Literature for Rome Chamber of Commerce

Email campaigns for Kodak

Speech-writing for the World Islamic Economic Forum

Brochures for Kuoni-owned Shoestring Holidays

Pharmaceutical materials for Ortho-McNeil

Paul is a member of British Mensa and has won two of their national competitions including their annual writing award.
